Toyama's Fresh Food :1 night 2 days

Toyama Bay Sushi

When visiting Toyama, the land famous seafood and rice, “Toyama Bay Sushi” is a must to eat.

“Toyama Bay Sushi” is an sushi that conveys the richness of the seasonal seafood and the pride of the area.

A wide variety of fish inhabits Toyama Bay thanks to the 4,000-meter difference between the Tateyama Mountain Range’s 3,000-meter-high peaks and the bay itself, with depths of 1,000 meters. The melted snow that pours from this range in the Northern Alps into the bay creates this miraculous environment.

2 World Heritage Site, the Historic Villages of Gokayama/Ainokura (pm)

Gokayama consists of 40 small villages. The 2 villages , Ainokura and Suganuma, are registered as World Heritage Sites along with Shirakawago's Ogimachi village in Gifu Prefecture.

Ainokura is the largest village of traditional thatched farmhouses in the Gokayama area, with around 20 houses. 100 to 350 years old houses at Ainokura create a nostalgic atmosphere of a bygone Japan. Most of the houses are still private residences, some serve as cafes, museums, and even guesthouses for stay. The village scenery is beautiful in each season, but more in the winter when the houses are covered with snow. Staying overnight is the best way to enjoy the captivating sights including seasonal illumination events.

1 Iwase Tour

Historic streets with shipping buildings from the Meiji Period

The Iwase district Toyama was a thriving port town from the beginning of the Edo Period (1603-1867), serving the Kitamae cargo ships that crossed the Sea of Japan. An important highway called the Hokkoku Kaido used to run through this area, lined with Kitamae shipping buildings. Many buildings from the Meiji Period (1868-1912) remain now, preserving much of the district's history.

Day 2

2 Shogetsu (Lunch)

Shogetsu is a long-established restaurant founded in 1911 (Meiji 44). It is located in a quiet place east of Toyama Port, down a small alley from Iwase Beach.
